Canadian Heritage News: January 2002

Can a Jew be defined as a Jew solely on the basis of his or her religious practices, a religious belief imposed upon them, to a greater or lesser degree, in the same manner and degree that many children have their parent's faith thrust upon them? It has been proven scientifically that all humans can trace their ancestry back to a single early primitive hominid. Can this tenuous relationship be considered as, or more, important than membership in a modern race, the product of millennia of evolution towards perfection? After all, if we push back the envelope, we can claim common ancestry with chimps, gorillas, other primates and back even further to yet more primitive organisms. Racially the Jews were originally Semites, the same race as other Semites such as modern Arabs. Over the centuries, as Jews spread throughout the world, their bloodline was thinned out in many regions (where they became isolated from other Jews) through various forms of assimilation and intermarriage. Numerous Jews are, as a result of this thinning out of their blood, as pure White, Asian and African as any other member of those races. Their only relationship to Jewdom is their religious faith. Therefore, can these racially pure Whites, Asians and Africans truly be defined as Jews? The "One Drop" criteria can become pretty tenuous and carried back far enough, no one is immune. Examples of such Jews, to all intents and purposes of pure White Blood, abound. They include many Danish Jews (and to a lesser extent other Scandinavians) and Russian Jews originating from areas settled by the Vikings. Is it therefore not the High Duty of Aryans to rescue, succour and rehabilitate those members of the Judaic faith, who are of acceptably pure White Blood, from their indenture to the Zionist tyranny that is denying them their true heritage?
